Bozeman City Commission increases impact fees on new houses

Posted on June 25

By the Associated Press

BOZEMAN - The Bozeman City Commission has voted to increase another impact fee builders must pay to construct a new single-family home in Bozeman.

The commission voted 4-1 Monday to triple the fees to provide fire and emergency medical services protection to a new home from $246 to $755.

The city had already increased the impact fees for streets from $2,380 to $3,328, while water and sewer impact fees increased from a total of $4,614 to $6,307.

Planning director Chris Saunders says builders will now pay $3,340 more in fees to build the average size single-family house in Bozeman than they paid in January 2007.

Impact fees are one-time charges for utility connections and other infrastructure impacts assessed on new construction.
